

The names projected onto the statue of Christopher Codrington are a selection of the names of enslaved persons who laboured and died on sugar plantations on Barbados and Antigua that Codrington owned and on other plantations nearby.

They are taken from inventories dating from the early 1700s when Codrington was alive and in a few cases from the 1780s.

The inventories are on deposit in the Bodleian Library from the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (now the United Society Partners in the Gospel – <https://www.uspg.org.uk/>). The Society was left two plantations in Christopher Codrington's will in 1710 and was therefore their owner in the 1780s. Names from Antigua are found in microfilms of originals now in Antigua but currently inaccessible to researchers (Oxford, Bodleian Libraries, Micr. W. Ind. 22/1).

Here are the names that appear on the statue, and a much longer list of names from Antigua. Only a few have 'surnames'. The forenames you see were almost certainly 'given' to the enslaved persons by their owner. They are the nearest we can now get to their original identities.

All Souls College is currently sponsoring further research in Caribbean archives to recover more names of the enslaved from records of plantations originally owned by the Codrington family.
